HISTORY OF REAL PHOTO POSTCARDS 1888 AMATEUR PHOTOGRAPHY IS BORN

George Eastman introduced a camera that allowed anyone to take 100 photographs. The camera was then mailed to Rochester, New York where the photographs were printed and the camera reloaded and returned to the photographer. This marked the beginning of amateur photography.

1902 PHOTOGRAPHIC POSTCARD PRINTING PAPER INTRODUCED

The Eastman Kodak Company introduced the first postcard photographic paper, named gaslight paper. The paper's emulsion was very fast and allowed the amateur photographer to print at night using artificial light or exposure to a gas jet. The introduction of this type of paper, still used for contact sheets, produced a boom in the making of real photo postcards. Kodak trademarks for gaslight papers were Velox and Azo. Other companies soon followed Eastman: the Canadian Kodak Company manufactured Oko paper and Ansco manufactured the Cyko and Noko papers.

1903 POSTCARD CAMERA INTRODUCED

The next development in the history of the real photo postcard occurred in 1903 with the introduction of the Eastman Kodak Folding Pocket Kodak No. 3A. The camera took postcard size (3/12" x 5 1/2") negatives. Two other early manufacturers of postcard cameras were Seneca and the Chicago Ferrotypes Company.

1906 REAL PHOTO POSTCARD PRINTING SERVICES INTRODUCED

In this year Eastman Kodak began actively promoting the real photo postcard business by offering the service of printing the postcards for the photographer.

In this year the "undivided back" postcard was replaced by the "divided back" format. The new format added a space for the message on the left back of the postcard, thus allowing the full front to be used for the image. This change marked the beginning of many real photo postcard businesses. These businesses employed photographers to take portraits in studios, at and popular locations such as amusement parks. These photographers were also hired to produce postcards of a town for promotional purposes and to also record local events, including disasters such as floods or train wrecks.
